Program Highlights

The Individualized Master of Arts Program (IMAP) is intended to provide a structure for master's-level study in areas where the university has significant strengths but does not offer a formal program. It also makes it possible for students to pursue interdisciplinary graduate degrees.

To gain expertise and an appropriate selection of courses, the IMAP degree draws upon resources outside of the university. It offers maximum flexibility, combining taught courses, independent study or research, seminars and other approved experiences. The overall content of the program is negotiated with a faculty advisor.

Unit Count of Program: 36-40

Program Structure

The IMAP degree consists of a minimum of 36-40 units that constitute a coherent disciplinary or interdisciplinary focus. At least 3 units must be in biblical/theological studies, or a related area that integrates questions of philosophy and/or values in the field of study, and 4 units of thesis or equivalent.

Students will work with their advisor to formulate a study plan based on specified requirements. The structure and content of the program is negotiated with the faculty advisor and may consist of a combination of taught courses, independent study or research, tutorials, seminars or supervised/other field experiences. This plan will need to receive final approval from the IMAP Council.
